

JGD
F91
X
no. 8

MATRIX SERVICE

❑ Ever more periodicals realize it as their duty to give publicity to the attempts at relief of the Russian famine stricken being made by The Friends of Soviet Russia. Requests for famine pictures have therefore increased.

❑ We can now furnish mats of the illustrations below, FREE, to any periodical applying.

❑ It will be noticed that the illustrations which follow are in coarse screen. They are purposely so made for papers which use news-print. Periodicals using finished paper, can secure mats in finer screen, upon application.

❑ Periodicals desiring cuts rather than mats, should make special application for cuts.

❑ All periodicals are requested to give The Friends of Soviet Russia mention in reproducing the illustrations.

➡ ORDER BY NUMBER ➡

(1)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Two sisters, the youngest and oldest of a family, eating a morsel by the roadway. The rest of the family died. Send your help to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

PROPERTY OF
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
MEMORIAL LIBRARY

(2)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Eating gleanings from the fields. This boy, an orphan, was found wandering about in search of food. With such clothes as he has you may well ask yourself whether he has survived the severe Russian winter. Send your contribution for the famine stricken to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 W. 13th St., N. Y. City.

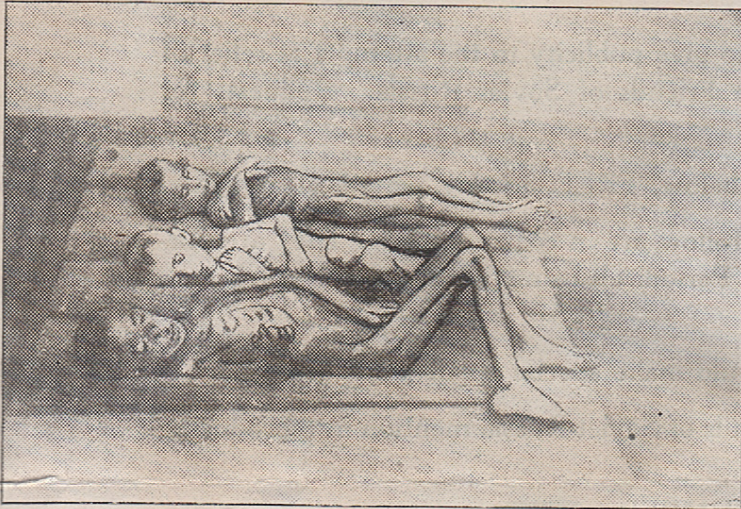

➡ ORDER BY NUMBER ➡

FREE MATRIX SERVICE

Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City

(3)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

At the morgue, awaiting burial, which in most instances, can not occur while the severe winter lasts. They died for want of bread, just bread. Give them bread by sending a contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(4)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Food at last, many wagon loads of it for many thousands of starving men, women and children. Let food bought with your money also go forward. Remit to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(5)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Awaiting their turn at the door of a receiving station for orphaned and deserted children. Your bread will keep them alive. Remit to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(6)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

As the snow recedes corpses are found by the hundreds, some dressed in white, some without any clothes. Help the famine stricken by sending your contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(7)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Waiting, hoping to be admitted into one of the homes for foundlings, many of which the Soviet Government has erected everywhere to receive orphans. You can help these children to food by remitting to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(8)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

People die in fields, on streets, everywhere, and the dead wagon makes continual rounds. Send your contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(9)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

The sun, melting the heavy snow, disclosed this "mountain" of corpses. Babies, men, women, grandfathers and grandmothers, all at rest together, awaiting spring and burial. Help, please. Send your contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

(10)

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

A mound of babies and children. They starved to death and died of diseases due to foods which their baby stomachs could not digest. Use a few of your spare dollars to send milk to Russia's starving babies. Remit to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

Dead by the roadside. Scenes such as this are duplicated hundreds of times daily in the famine area of Soviet Russia. Your contribution would help save lives. Remit to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

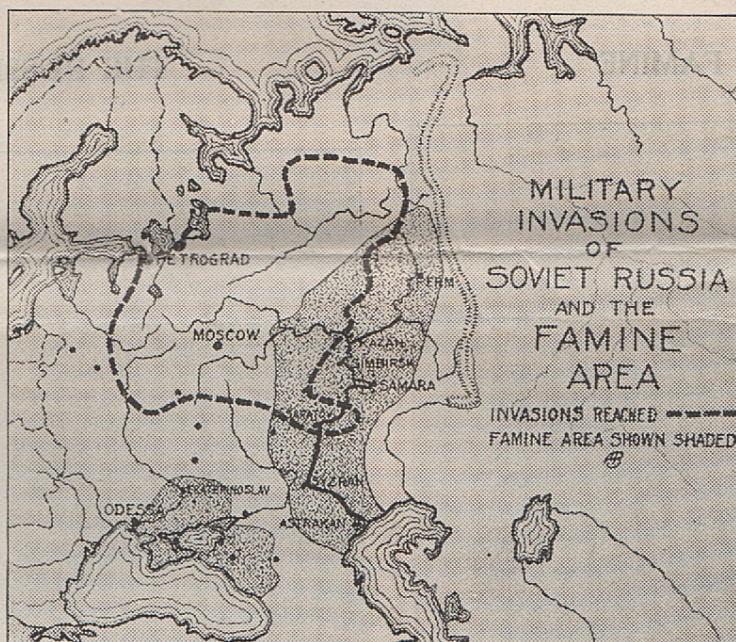

These famine stricken will appeal to you no more. They await burial, which can not take place until the ground thaws. Many about to die, drag themselves to the cemetery so that they may die on sacred soil. Give assistance. Remit to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

89099293680

b89099293680a

THE RUSSIAN FAMINE

This map shows plainly to what extent military invasions financed by the allied powers were responsible for the famine. Only the territory inside the heavy dotted line was free from invasion. Invasions caused confiscation and destruction of crops as well as interference with the agricultural economy. Help the famine stricken by sending your contribution to The Friends of Soviet Russia, 201 West 13th Street, New York City.